Biological theories are based on observations that lead to hypotheses. These hypotheses can be explained by experiments that are tested by simulations. Theories are explained by predictions that are tested by experiments. Communication builds on observations and is based on shared hypotheses.